BootRacer is a free application that will allow you to analyze the boot and startup time of Windows 10 and other versions in Windows PE environments. The program displays the following information about each boot:

- The list of drivers and hardware that have loaded.
- The Windows drivers that have been loaded.
- The Windows boot parameters that have been used.
- The OS-specific boot parameters that have been used.
- The services that have started and how long it took them to start.
- The startup services that have started and how long it took them to start.
- The startup items that have started and how long it took them to start. • The appearance of the desktop. • The amount of time that has passed since you last rebooted. • How many times you rebooted since your last reboot. • The amount of time that has passed since you last restarted. • How many times you restarted since your last reboot. The application records the time when the Windows Desktop appears and the amount of time required to boot Windows. By default the application creates log files (see below) for each boot or restart operation. You can choose the location of the log file, its name, and its type. You can select the dates from which BootRacer gathers data. The application will record the dates of the first operation and the last operation for each category. You can select the options of which boot or restart time (Startup or Boot) to be analyzed. Log files The application automatically creates log files under the following directory C:\Users\username\AppData\Roaming\BootRacer. The name of the log file is the same as the startup or boot time you selected in the application. You can choose the type of logging that you want to make in the application by selecting the desired category and the logging type at boot or startup time. For example if you choose only the Boot category then the application will only create a log file for boot time. The log type can be set to a full log, a fast log or a log only for failures. The application creates a full log only on the first boot or restart. The rest log type will be set to a fast log. If you select the Failure category the log type can be set to only a log file for failures. In this case, there is no log file on first boot or reboot. The application is easy to use and it is very easy to get

- Don't stop waiting for that sweet desktop that represents the face of modern computing. Windows 10 takes forever to boot, which can be a huge issue for your PC and kind of unthinkable unless you have BootRacer by your side. We've been waiting for a replacement for the notorious Boot

SysPrep (Windows 8/8.1), a program that logs every boot process step up until reaching the desktop, making the user feel like he's having a conversation with their PC. Now that BootRacer is out, it's time to see how it stacks up. There are a few important features, and most of them are reported in the very helpful startup analysis tool. Since Windows 10 doesn't bring you to the desktop even after booting, the majority of the testing is rendered useless, but the log file is still helpful. We understand most of what BootRacer can do now. Let's see how it does everything. ● Test Windows startup performance This tool monitors every Windows startup related to Windows start up and works well. You're not limited to BootRacer's startup tests, and its startup tests are very useful. This program has log files which can include pre-boot, password timeout, and both Startup and Shutdown. Startup includes everything that takes place at startup, including disks loading, and everything that happens during the boot process. Startup will let you know if something isn't functioning properly. ● Log boot time and compare online This is where you compare your own boot time to that of others. The online log can be viewed by many at once, and the log can be shared to other ones online in just a few clicks. BootRacer tries to tell you if something in your PC needs to be fixed. ● Save and share report You can save your analysis report to your PC's local drive, and many more. The Save report button is located in the very upper corner of the application's main window, and the Save report is located in the menu bar. ● Track total boot time Another valuable feature. With this

Speed up your PC by checking how long it takes for it to start Windows or Linux – the program can analyze all the boot-up parameters and speed up or slow down boot time. It can be used as an all-in-one application, or individually to check and speed up startup parameters. BootRacer allows you to check boot time, including Linux and other operating systems. Speed up the process by simply selecting a parameter that can be changed (and the time will be shortened). Your device has been detected! Dwayne “The Rock” Johnson has revealed that he has been bitten by, but so far has been able to avoid contracting, mosquitoes. The actor was bitten on the head by a mosquito while filming in Indonesia earlier this year. Johnson revealed during an appearance on The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon that he doesn’t have any mosquito bites. “I only got one bite on my head,” he said, “and I’m still standing.” Johnson told Fallon that the bite on his head was “probably the worst bite ever,” but that his body isn't showing any side effects yet. "Nothing's really going on yet," he said. "When I went to the doctor, they said you're doing fine.
