Hear it Know it Understanding an instrument means more than just learning how to play. It means knowing what to listen for, how to read the instrument, how to interpret the musicians' score, and how to convey this to others. There is a huge misunderstanding in schools as to what music education is about. Teachers have no value whatsoever when it comes to teaching music because they haven't spent enough time as active musicians. Many don't understand the power and value of music. REFERENCES Education at the Heart of Music – Daniel H. Rubinstein(contemporary view of the need for music in schools) Music is an intrinsic part of all children's lives. Music is the language of the soul. Music is universal and is a language that every person understands and can communicate. by using an isoprenoid analogue, carbenoxolone. However, there are some differences in the results. The analogues of both unsaturated and saturated C20 phytoene, such as phytyl, phytanol, and geranylgeranyl thioesters, are equally effective as carbenoxolone in promoting the synthesis of prenyl lipids. Carbenoxolone, phytol, and phytanol, however, are more effective than phytyl thioesters. [@B5] also showed that addition of carbenoxolone can increase the content of prenyl lipids in S. officinalis. The results of [@B5] showed that carbenoxolone increased the amount of prenyl lipids to a similar extent as do FPP and GGPP in our study. In this study, we observed that phytanol and phytol were more effective in stimulating the synthesis of prenyl lipids than phytol and carbenoxolone. It is possible that the higher the chain length of the prenyl chains, the more effective they are. In Arabidopsis and rice, the first step of carotenogenesis is the conversion of geranylgeranyl diphosphate (GGPP) into phytoene, the precursor of all carotenoids ([@B43]; [@B44]; [@B25]). In previous reports, it was shown that in rice OsEPO1 expressed in tobacco (Nicotiana tabacum) was able to convert
